About the Seminar

Libraries in pre-dependence times were book stores and kept under lock and key. Libraries were open for only learned people and were the custodian of kings or maharajas. Library movements in different parts of India were responsible for making libraries open for all. Post-independence, libraries in India transformed a lot and present libraries are more competent and technologically advanced. In academic and research libraries readers are getting access to online databases and all information at their fingertips with the introduction of Consortia and different library networks. Open-source Library management and digital library software are being used all over India. Many conferences and seminars are being held for educating library professionals about new trends and technologies. The main objective of this seminar is to take an overview of all types of libraries in India pre and post-independence and present a journey of Indian libraries in the last 75 years in the form of a compendium to the ICSSR, New Delhi on the occasion of Azadi Ka Amrut Mahotsav.
